Entrepreneurship Training in Organic Farm Business

Why should you participate in the EDP in Organic Farm Business

Organic farming is a holistic approach towards growing food.

This means that organic food growers think about the effects of their farming practices on the soil, crops and livestock on the farm, the quality of the food they produce, the local community and the wider environment.

Organic growers manage the land in ways that work with natural systems rather than trying to dominate or change them. For example, organic growers use predatory invertebrates to help control pests instead of using man-made pesticides.

The word 'organic' is a legal term. All organic growers and processors must register with one of the organic certification bodies which inspect them at least once a year.
